Scientific Benefits of Stretching and Flexibility

Stretching has been found to benefit much more than our flexibility. Studies show benefits to health both physically and mentally.

- Physical Health: Research found that stretching can lead so many physical benefits, such as increased blood flow, increased cardiovascular endurance, and lower inflammation.
- Mental Health: Stretching brings our body into a state of relaxation. It helps release endorphins like dopamine and serotonin. It even helps to reduce anxiety, depression, fatigue, and frustration.
- Preserving Vitality: A lack of stretching can cause our bodies to make us feel older than we are. Navy Seal, David Goggins, is in prime physical condition and credits it to stretching. He claims that he is in better shape at 43 than he was at 20.

Pears Are a Life-Saver

Being high in nutrition and low in calories makes pears the perfect afternoon snack. However, these are not the only healthy benefits that pears bring to the table. A few benefits of pears include:

1. Protection Against Cancer: Pears have been found to have an impact in the reduction of lung cancer for current and past smokers.
2. Improved Heart Health: Rich in fiber, pears help keep your heart healthy by lowering cholesterol.
3. Reduction in Risk of Type 2 Diabetes: Pears have a low effect on blood sugar which makes them a healthy, delicious, and safe snack.

“calories in, calories out” is not a reliable way to manage your diet and loose weight:

1. It is close to impossible to measure precisely. Calorie counting apps cannot accurately determine your exact calorie intake and outtake.
2. Not all calories are the same. Our bodies do not consume calories equally. Different foods have different impacts on our bodies.
3. Our bodies interfere with the entire mentality. Bodies adjust so you may experience weight loss in the beginning, but over time your body will adjust to this lifestyle and begin losing less weight.

Vitamin D: A Natural Supplement to Reduce Heart Attack Risk

A recent study published in the British Medical Journal found that those who take daily Vitamin D supplements had a 19 percent lower rate of heart attacks. Vitamin D helps to improve blood flow in our bodies, which ultimately helps to lower high blood pressure. It also helps with bone strength and improving your immune system. Overall, Vitamin D leads to a healthier lifestyle all around. If you are living in an area that experiences seasons or aren't able to get in the sun as often as you'd like, Vitamin D supplements may be the perfect solution to help you and your body stay healthy!
