How To Protect Your Medical Records From Identity Theft

Identity theft to many people is not a big deal because it has become synonymous with the minor hassle of dealing with a stolen credit-card number. And it happens so often, we have become numb to data-breach headlines.

But a far more treacherous form of ID theft goes beyond dollars and cents and can literally mean life or death.

Medical identity theft is when a thief steals your identity to receive medical services, buy medical products, or rip off health insurers. It affects private insurers, Medicare and Medicaid. It can also change your medical history leading to the incorrect treatments or wrong medications. Just recently, Anthem Insurance, America's second largest insurer announced a health care breach that affected an estimated 80 million people!
